AMERICAN WOMEN IN MAGNIFICENT GOWNS AT THE CORONATION

Descriptions of Some of the Dresses Worn by American Ladies and Robes of the Ladies of the Peerage.

London, June 22.—The dresses worn by American ladies at the coronation in Westminster Abbey are described as follows:

Mrs. Whitlaw Reid, wife of the American Ambassador:—The dress she wore at the first court this season. It is of white satin, the front and back trimmed with pearls and diamonds, and panels of fine lace. She will also wear a train of pearls and diamonds, a pearl collar and ropes of pearls.

Mrs. John D. Hammond, wife of the American Special Envoy:—A dress of heavy white satin embroidered with jeweled peacock feathers. Her jewels consist of a tiara, necklace, earrings and bracelet of diamonds and emeralds. The earrings are a pair worn by Catherine II. She will carry a white ostrich feather fan, a counterpart of the one presented by South Africa to the present Queen at the time of her marriage. Like all the other ladies, she will wear three ostrich feathers in her hair.

Mrs. Phillips, wife of the first secretary of the embassy:—White satin dress with pearl and silver trimming. A tiara, diamond collar and pearl necklace.

Mrs. Simpson, wife of Captain Simpson, naval attaché American Embassy:—White satin trimmed with old point lace and diamonds; jewels, diamonds.

Mrs. Sleem, wife of Captain Sleem, military attaché American Embassy:—White satin charmingly embroidered in a diamond feather design; a diamond tiara and necklace.

The Queen's train was carried by six young ladies, daughters of Paris. Instead of as usual by pages. Those selected for the duty were Lady Mary Dawson, daughter of the Countess of Dartrey; Lady Mabel Ogilvy, daughter of the Countess of Airlie; Lady Victoria Carrington, daughter of the Countess Carrington; Lady Ellen Butler, daughter of the Countess of Janborough; Lady Eileen Knox, daughter of the Countess of Ranfurly; and Lady Dorothy Browne, daughter of the 1st Viscount of Ailesford.

The robes worn by the members of the various degrees of the peerage at the coronation of the monarch are regulated by precedent dating back for centuries. Those of the first, or ducal degree, which is regarded as so dignified that all princes of the blood royal are created dukes on the attainment, or shortly after, of their majority, must wear in the first place full court dress or uniform. Over this is carried a surcoat or mantle of crimson velvet lined with white taffeta edged with miniver, which is the white fur of the ermine or stoat with the black tails attached, while the cape is of the same fur without the black tails, but with four rows of black fur symmetrical on each side.

The coronation robe of a duchess is a crimson velvet mantle, the cape furled with white miniver barred with four rows of black ermine five inches from the edge. The skirt meets at the waist over a white panel. The bodice is low and tight-fitting, with stomacher and panel of white or cream material, with fur bordering the top of the bodice and continuing in a band over each shoulder. Her coronet is similar to that of her husband, while her train is two yards in length.

Fears of the next degree, or marquises, wear precisely similar robes to those of the dukes, but they are entitled to only three and a half rows of black fur on their capes, four on the right and three on the left side. The cap is the same, but the coronet is adorned with four silver balls and four golden strawberry leaves arranged alternately.

A marchioness's robe differs from that of a duchess in that it has only three and a half rows of black fur round it, while her train is reduced to a yard and three-quarters in length. She wears a similar coronet to that of her husband.

For an earl, or count, the robes are the same, but the bars of black fur are reduced to three. His coronet is a circle of gold or silver gilt, chased and bordered with ermine, and it bears eight pyramidal points placed around it alternately with eight strawberry leaves, while a large silver ball is placed on the top of each point.

A countess wears on her coronation robe only three rows of black ermine, the border of miniver being reduced to three inches and her train to a yard and a half in length. Her coronet is the same as that of an earl.

Viscounts are robed similarly to the peers of higher degree, but are entitled to only two and a half rows of black fur on their capes, arranged three on the right and two on the left side. The golden circle of a viscount's coronet is surmounted by sixteen silver balls.

The robe of a viscountess, in the same way, has but two and a half rows of black fur with white border of two and a half inches, while her train is a yard and a quarter in length.

For the barons, who form the lowest degree of the peerage, only two rows of black fur are permitted to be worn on their capes, their robes being otherwise similar to those of the other peers. Their coronets consist of a circle of gold bordered with ermine, and bearing six silver balls.

A baroness wears only two bars of black fur and a two inch border of white miniver, while her train only measures a yard in length. She wears a similar coronet to that of her husband.

The style of the dress worn by all peeresses at the coronation, as distinguished from the robes, is regulated by the office of the Earl Marshal, as follows: A kirtle of crimson velvet, bordered all round with a narrow edging of miniver or white fur, reaching to front, otherwise plain. This kirtle may be fastened down the back or in front. It opens from the waist in front, widening gradually down to the round. It may be gathered back in three fastenings, each tied back with a bow of gold tinsel.

The sleeves are about nine inches long of the same material decorated with two narrow rows of white miniver, below which are five lappets of length varying between one and three inches, each edged with white miniver, and below these white lace. The petticoat is white or cream-colored, edged with lace, embroidery or brocade, which is of gold or silver. Jewels are permitted to be worn round the neck, and also on the bodice and petticoat, while tassets may be carried on the head.

Many Accidents in Greatest Aviation Meet in the World's History.

Map showing the course of the 950-mile flight from Vincennes, Ind., to London, England, by way of Belgium and Holland, and return to France, the course requires the crossing and recrossing of the English Channel. Fifty aviators are entered in the race.

At upper right, famous French aviator, Voisard, who won the Paris to Rome flight and who arrived at Lland, 212 miles distant from Paris, on the first leg of the race, third. He is looked upon as a strong contestant for the aviation classic.

Below, picture of wrecked monoplane at the park in Vincennes, from which point the present race started, above being the most recent one.

These grounds have been the scene of when the late minister of war met his death. Many wrecks, the picture shown above being the most recent one.

THE NEW ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY COMMITTEE

PRESIDENT'S LATEST HOBBY.

Washington, D. C.—The new Economy and Efficiency Committee, the latest hobby of the President. The personnel has just been completed and the picture shows the full committee. Left to right: Merritt O. Chace, secretary; Wm. F. Willoughby, the assistant director of the census, who has secured leave of absence to take up this new work; Frederick A. Cleveland, chairman; Frank J. Goodnow of the faculty of Columbia University of New York; and W. W. Wargick, who until he was appointed to this committee was chief justice of the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone. Messrs. Warwick and Goodnow are the new appointees, the others have been at work for several months. The functions of the committee are to promote efficiency in the various government departments.

Man's Rights.
That man who has applied for a divorce because his wife kicks over the pail of hot water he uses when he is scrubbing the kitchen floor will have the sympathy of the public. She interferes unwarrantably with his rights as a husband and as a man.

Boy's Best Preceptor.
The finest moral preceptor a boy can have is his own father, when that father is worthy of the name, and only the very gravest reasons can justify sending a child from home before he has reached the age of at least fourteen years.

Worry Don't Help.
There is no crying need to worry about the future of anyone—men carve their own way to undying Fame or sink into Oblivion despite what we may say in praise or blame.

Grave Delinquency.
I hold all indulgence of sadness that has the slightest tincture of discontent to be a grave delinquency.—Elmer.

Don't Jibe With.
There are some who give away everything they hear; there are others who give away everything they earn; and there is a slight difference in their friendship.

If You Really Insist On Paying TWO Prices

For your dental work, that is your own affair, but I have the largest dental business in this part of the state.

Simply because I put my charges on a reasonable basis, and do the work the equal of any dentist.

In fact, far superior to a lot of work I see every day, for which people have paid twice or three times my prices.

WOMAN SHOT DOWN IN COLD BLOOD AT OWN DOOR; MURDERER WAS CAPTURED

MRS. JOHANNA HIRSCHKE KILLED BY LOUIS KELLER LATE LAST EVENING IN REAR OF HOUSE.

POLICE HAVE SEARCH

Prisoner Held For Trial in Circuit Court Without Bail—Tells His Side of the Story.

Louis Keller, alleged murderer of Mrs. Johanna Hirschke, wife of Fred Hirschke, who was shot and almost instantly killed at her home at 1414 South Third street last evening, was arraigned in municipal court this morning before Municipal Judge F. L. H. Hirschke on a charge of murder in the first degree, waiting the right of preliminary examination and was bound over to the circuit court for trial.

Keller, who had been in court this morning concerning the occurrence of last night, said that the examination would do him no good and stated that he would not employ a lawyer. Keller claims he shot in self defense.

Keller was arrested about six o'clock this morning after a search which lasted all night and he was finally found by city scavengers asleep on a boat which was in dry dock on Goose Island. Posses worked from the time the news of the killing was received until half past six o'clock this morning under the direction of Chief of Police George Appleby and Sheriff E. H. Hanson. At half past three this morning they took out posses in autos owned by Harry Nowlan, fire and police commissioner, Peter Goodman, Herman Priolepp and Fred Turner and the county around Janesville was scoured in the search for Keller. The members of the party including a number of volunteers who offered to lend their services to the officers were: Sheriff Hanson, Chief of Police George Appleby, Officers John Brown, Sam Brown, Jim Dorn, Patrick Manning, Thomas Morrissey, and Ed. Halton, Thomas McElkies, Jack Weston, Bert Godfrey, George Palmer, L. N. Skavlen, Alvin Warner, O. E. Meyer, Dr. G. B. Thuermer, the drivers, Nowlan, Priolepp, Turner and Goodman, and three newspaper men.

There were practically no clues by which to trace the man, beyond the fact that neighbors thought that when Keller left the Hirschke home after the shooting he had run through the bushes at the rear of the home of Mrs. Mary Walker and Mrs. Milie Northrup at 1426 South Third street. It is now thought that Keller ran back of their home and made his way across the Fair Grounds and thence down to the river.

Charles S. Putnam, one of the directors of the Janesville Park association, says that at about half past seven o'clock he saw Keller driving slowly about the track at the Fair Grounds and later heard the report of a shot. Keller drove away from the Fair Grounds Mr. Putnam says, about eight o'clock.

Keller in Statement.
In his cell at the county jail this forenoon, Keller made the following statement to a reporter:

"The way the thing originated was that I sold him (Hirschke) my store pretty near a year ago and signed a contract to take the pay for it out in board. After I stayed there a week or two weeks I could not stand it any longer and I left. I never asked him for any money as I had agreed to take the pay in board. On Friday day (Hirschke) met me on the street and said to me, 'Come to my house tomorrow night at nine o'clock.'

"When I came there he said, 'What do you want, you?' and took a stick and hit me on the head. I fell down and then his wife came out and kicked me too.

"As I had heard of Hirschke's reputation I went on Main street on Wednesday and bought a revolver to protect myself as I had never used one before. I shot in the air with no intention to kill anyone and never had any intention of killing anything, not even a chicken.

Describes Shooting.
"How do you account for the fact that Mrs. Hirschke was struck by the bullets?" Keller was asked.

"Well, I shot in the air when I was lying on the ground and she must have bent over me and was struck by the bullets. I did the same thing as any other man would have done under the circumstances.

"Did you ever have any other trouble with the Hirschkes?"

"Never a word. I could not make them pay because I had signed a contract to take my pay in board."

Keller stated that he was seventy-nine years of age and had made his home in this city for the past five or six years. He is a well known character about town and is said to have advocated anarchistic doctrines. He is a little over five feet in height and has curly black hair, rather thin, on top. None of the members of his immediate family are living, his wife and two children having died.

Mrs. Hirschke was forty-five years of age and was born in Pomorania, Germany, April 18, 1866. Besides her husband she is survived by the one daughter, Catherine. The arrangements for the funeral have not been completed.

Inquest Adjourned.
On the order of District Attorney Stanley Dunwiddie, summons for a coroner's jury to hold an inquest were issued by Justice Stanley D. Tallman and served by Constable John Comstock. The jurors chosen were: W. E. Lawyer, H. W. Brown, C. F. Connelley, R. L. Brown, E. E. Bullock and J. L. Horn. The jury met in Justice Tallman's court at one o'clock this afternoon and took adjournment until Monday morning at nine o'clock.

TOO MANY WIRES ON JANESVILLE STREETS

State Fire Marshal and Party of Inspectors Find Fault With Number of Wires on Streets.—Praise For Fire Department.

State Fire Marshal T. M. Purcell, and his assistant J. E. Florin and corps of inspectors finished their work of inspecting the city as to fire precautions. They found that there were many places for improvement in the matter of safeguards for fire in Janesville and pointed them out very clearly.

One of the conditions which was especially bad was the amount of wires in the business streets of the town, which could not help but seriously hamper the work of the fire departments, should a bad fire originate. This difficulty was demonstrated in the recent fire in the American hotel block. New ordinances should be enacted, where needed in this matter and if they already existed they should be enforced, was the recommendation.

Not only were the wires in the streets in a bad way, but the electric wiring on the inside of many of the business buildings, as well as private homes, were in a deplorable condition. As an example of this, carelessness was noted the number of drops which were hung over halls, which is dangerous practice and is the cause for many of the mysterious fires.

One of the most flagrant disregard of fire prevention was noted in the fact that many dealers and house holders carelessly left their gasoline pumps in the vicinity of stoves and buildings, thus multiplying the possibility of fire and large losses. All persons having gasoline tanks should look to this matter of the location of the same.

Numerous old frame buildings in the center of town were found to be fire-trapped and their destruction was recommended as soon as possible. In connection with this also was noted the amount of rubbish and refuse which was allowed to collect in back yards and in basements and attics. This was a most flagrant abuse of all fire prevention laws and it should stop immediately.

The fire departments of the city were thoroughly inspected and they were found to be most efficient as to apparatus and methods of work. The force was found to be too small, however, for the inspection work which is necessary for a city the size of Janesville. The fire marshal recommended that the force be increased so that the business district, at least, could be inspected once in twenty-four hours.

Other conditions were noted by the inspectors all with the idea of lessening the fire loss of the state so that the insurance rate would be correspondingly lowered.

FOUND DEAD BY WIFE ON RETURN TO HOME AFTER AN ABSENCE

William Wilkinson's Life Ended by Gas at His Home on Lincoln Street This Morning.

Peering through the kitchen window on her failure to gain an entrance into her home, 327 Lincoln street, Mrs. William Wilkinson was horrified to see her husband sitting in a chair by the kitchen stove apparently asleep, but not waking on her repeated rappings. Hastily summoning the police by telephone from a neighbor, Officer John Brown responded and on breaking into the house found Wilkinson dead, one burner of the gas stove turned on and the lower floor of the house full of gas.

Other officers were summoned and meanwhile Mrs. Wilkinson and her two children were cared for by a neighbor, the woman in a hysterical condition calling for her husband and begging that she might be taken to him.

It appears that Mrs. Wilkinson and children had been visiting in Belvidere and that her husband and father had become over anxious for their return even visiting the police as late as last Friday to see if some means could not be taken to make her come back.

Frequent letters from the wife that she would return this day or that he believed to have unbalanced Wilkinson's mind and he talked of suicide. He was employed as a baker at Colvin's and when he did not show up for work this morning it was thought he had gone to Belvidere where his brother lived and where he and his wife had lived for a year until two months ago.

Mrs. Wilkinson was too hysterical to talk this noon but managed to say that she had planned to go home many times and her failure to do so had evidently caused her husband's madness. One little baby, a year and three months old, the other three lagged for mother in their endeavor to comfort her while she sobbed for her dead husband.

Mrs. Wilkinson was formerly Miss Hazel Strover and is a grand-daughter of the late Randall Williams. They have been married for a little over four years and until recently were apparently very happy. Wilkinson is of Scotch descent and has a brother in the banking business in Belvidere and a father and mother living in Scotland. His wife is also of the same nationality but is an orphan.

Mrs. Wilkinson is almost beside herself with grief and begged that her husband's body be left in the house. It was removed to Kimball's morgue and will later be returned to the home where the funeral will be held. Kind neighbors cared for the wife and children who returned from their visit in Belvidere to find the father and husband dead and all that was possible was done to comfort her.

Wilkinson had brought home packages of tea and coffee with him and had apparently slept in his bedroom and then dressed and sat down in the kitchen to smoke. He either turned on the wrong burner in heating water or deliberately did so and ended his life. He had been dead about seven hours when found by his wife on her return from Belvidere.

Each life should become conscious of its own individuality and responsibility, and place itself on its own standing ground. WOMAN SHOT DOWN IN COLD BLOOD AT OWN DOOR

The shooting occurred about half past nine o'clock at the Hieschke home 1111 South Third street, just after the family had returned from downtown. Mrs. Hieschke and Catherine, the daughter, not him at his tailor shop at 411 West Milwaukee street and after attending one of the electric shows had started for home.

At the corner of South Main and Court streets, according to the story told by Hieschke this morning, the daughter saw Keller driving in a rig and remarked concerning it to her parents. Later as they approached the home Catherine Hieschke saw someone standing behind a tree in a neighbors yard, but it was thought it was one of the neighbors.

The family went to the rear door of the home which is approached by a low porch. Mrs. Hieschke was in advance of the other two, going to get the key to the door which was kept in a secret place. Just as she was about to unlock the door the daughter spied Keller coming around the house and said:

"Pa, there's somebody coming."

Hieschke stepped into the yard and recognizing Keller, said:

"Hello, there, Keller."

Keller did not answer, but immediately opened fire on Hieschke.

The bullets missed their mark, but whizzed by close to Hieschke's face. Hieschke stepped back and one bullet went wild.

Mrs. Hieschke then took a step forward and exclaimed:

"What are you trying to do, kill my husband?"

Keller continued the fire and both bullets entered the woman's body, one passing through her breast and the other severing the jugular vein in the neck.

She died almost instantly, uttering a single exclamation, and falling over against the door and dropping to the floor of the porch.

Hieschke, when Keller started shooting at the woman stepped back for a weapon and in the darkness, seized a hoe. He brought this down on Keller's head, knocking the latter to the ground. The blow knocked off Keller's hat and loosened his hold on the gun, which he dropped in the grass.

Was Knocked Down.

Hieschke again knocked the man down and ran to secure aid at the home of Walter Wheelock. Mr. Wheelock was at home, but on account of the sickness of a child, at his wife's request, would not go over and Hieschke returned to his own home to find that Keller had gone.

While Hieschke was gone his daughter had gone to the home of another neighbor and telephoned to the police station and officers with the patrol wagon arrived soon after.

Chief of Police Appleby made an inspection of the place and Keller's hat and the revolver were discovered. The broken hoe handle was also taken by the police and a search of the grounds nearby rendered difficult because of the darkness, was made. Mrs. Hieschke's body was taken to Kimball's morgue.

Officers Began Search.

Other officers joined them at the scene of the murder and they were assisted by citizens about town. The search was continued in this manner until after midnight, and at three o'clock passes were organized by the Chief of Police and Sheriff E. H. Rungtun and four automobile loads of men scoured the country for miles on the east side of the river in an effort to locate Keller.

Stops were made at various farm homes notifying the farmers of the occurrence and drivers on the road were asked to keep sharp lookout and telephone the police station if they saw anyone who might answer to Keller's description. While the passes were at work Officer John Brown went out telephone calls to farmers in the vicinity.

Capture At Six.

The capture was made about six o'clock by Officers John Brown and Edward Hatten. While out on a trip with one of the passes, Chief of Police Appleby had met and told two of the city scavengers of the search and told them if they saw Keller to immediately send word to police headquarters.

The men found Keller asleep in the front speed boat invented by William Reed, which had been drawn up on the neck at the head of the point of land near the gas house, known as Goose Island. They did not disturb the sleeper, but immediately telephoned the city hall.

The description given tallied with that of Keller and John Brown and Officer Hatten left immediately for the place with the police patrol.

Arriving at Goose Island, the policemen found Keller lying on his side on the floor of the boat with a handkerchief pressed to his head. Officer Hatten seized Keller and jerked him to his feet before he could make any resistance and the prisoner was taken to the police station. Keller's shirt front and cuffs and his vest were stained with blood and there was blood on his vest.

Had Scalp Wounds.

His head had two bad scalp wounds, one just above the forehead on the right side and the other on the back, both inflicted by Hieschke's blows. The hole of his ear had also been split and had bled quite freely.

The wounds were bathed and dressed by Dr. R. W. Eddon and Keller was locked in the woman's cell until he was taken into court.

That Keller's act was premeditated there seems to be no doubt. He hired a liverie car from A. F. Minkler early in the evening and was seen by neighbors of the Hieschkes, driving past the place between six and seven o'clock and about half past eight.

Just before he committed the crime, he left the rig tied on Ringold street and it was found there by the officers. The revolver which was picked up in the grass, was apparently a new one and it is thought the gun was purchased for this purpose.

One theory is that he intended to kill the entire family and perhaps end his own life. This is substantiated by the finding of Keller on the river bank and the belief is that after the means of self-destruction by shooting was taken away when he lost the revolver, he intended to commit suicide by drowning, but his courage failed him at the critical moment. Keller made no statement in the police station, when first brought in, nor was he questioned by the officers.

Theories Advanced.

Another theory advanced is that his intentions were to kill Mr. and Mrs. Hieschke, who had objected to his attentions to their daughter, who is not yet fifteen years of age.

Keller last fall was the proprietor of the tailoring shop on West Milwaukee street of which Hieschke is now in charge. At that time he desired to sell out and came to Hieschke, who was then employed by J. L. Ford & Son, and offered to dispose of the business for $100, taking his pay out in hand.

Hieschke says he was not anxious to make a bargain, but the deal was finally effected, a contract to that effect being drawn up. Keller remained at the Hieschke home two weeks.

The attention to the young girl it is alleged became so pronounced as to draw a rebuke from the mother and Keller left the home immediately. He owned at that time a black and white pony and cart. On one Sunday he took Miss Hieschke for a drive, going with her to Shoppers.

The pair did not return until late and the mother was occasioned some worried concerning her. Nothing was said to Keller, however, at the time, but when the following Sunday Keller repeated the performance with a drive to Edgerton, Mrs. Hieschke criticized him for his action.

Keller, so it is said, admitted he was in the wrong, and said he would leave immediately. He departed and the family had seen nothing of him until yesterday.

He had paid the rent for the store on West Milwaukee street for four months and through an arrangement made, Hieschke paid Keller for the rent of the place. The collections were made through a local attorney and it was learned in this way that Keller had been in Koscusko, although he since made the claim that he had been on a trip to Germany.

The first of this year the attorney served notice on Hieschke that the rent charge by Keller would be increased to fifteen dollars a month, but Hieschke told the collector that, as he had paid Keller the amount due for rent paid in advance, Keller had no more to say in that regard, Hieschke claims that there had been no real trouble between his family and the prisoner, although Keller had spoken roughly to his wife on several occasions.

Goat as a Business Asset.

A goat lives about ten years and will give about a quart of milk a day.

The Widow's Mite.

It is remarkable that the very people who have but little are the very people who are always giving much of the little that they have to people who have less—the story of the widow and her mite is as true today as ever.

Phillips on Matrimony.

The late David Graham Phillips had, like many bachelors, a cynical view of matrimony. Mr. Phillips, at a reunion of Princeton's class of '87, at the Princeton club, said of marriage: "The Persians have a proverb that every young man should consider well before proposing. It runs: 'He that venturith on matrimony is like unto one who thrusteth his hand into a sack containing many thousands of serpents and one eel. Yet, if the prophet so will it, he may draw forth the eel.'"

Easing a Cough.

For children who have passed the baby stage, linseed tea is the best thing known to ease a cough. Pour two quarts of boiling water on one ounce of whole linseed and twelve drachms of licorice root sliced. Add to this a slice or two of lemon. Let this stand in a jug covered over for six or seven hours, then strain it and sweeten to taste and it will be ready for use.

The Fatal Ring.

An amazing story is told by the late head of the Paris morgue. Five times within his experience dead bodies brought to the morgue were found to be wearing a certain ring easily distinguishable by its strange design. It bore in Eastern characters this legend: "May whosoever wears this ring die a miserable death." M. Marco, late chief of the Paris police, vouches for the truth of this.

Another Story.

"What did you do when your husband told you the old, old story?" "I told him to shut up before he was half through!" "Why, what a funny way to reply to a confession of love!" "Oh, is that what you mean? I thought you meant the story he told last night when he came home from a time with the boys."

Looked Easy to Him.

Graydon's father is dead, and the child, hearing other children talk of their fathers, began to importune his mother for "another papa." Mamma tried to explain that she couldn't conveniently grant this wish, at the moment, but Graydon didn't consider any of the suggested reasons adequate. "It ought to be easy enough, mamma, with so many loose men all around!"

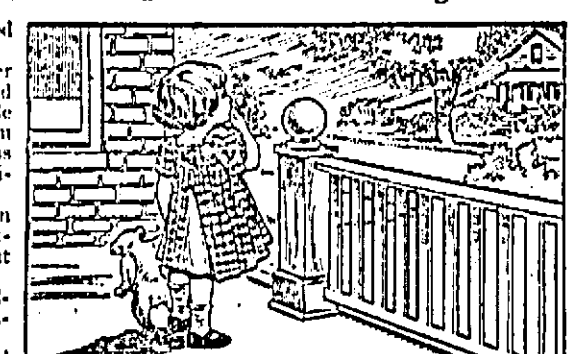

Faithful to Duty.

When the army of Pompey stormed and took Jerusalem, at the moment the temple was taken, the priests were engaged with the daily sacrifices, and amid all the horrors which surrounded them, they continued their solemn duties unmoved, thinking it better to suffer whatever came upon them at their very altars than to omit anything their law required.

Little Bed-Time Tales By EDITH HAVENS

The Robin Rain Song

WHAT is that?" asked Marion.

For the moment her mother did not answer and again came the sweet little song, somewhere high up from the great elm tree just across the street, from Marion's neighbor.

"What is it?" asked Marion again, as she rose from her little rocking chair and went close to the piazza rail.

"Why, it is the robin red-breast singing to the rain," answered her mother.

"To the rain?" questioned Marion, wrinkling up her nose in a perplexed sort of way.

"Yes, answered her mother.

"And then Marion, drawing her chair up close, listened in wonderment at the wonderful story.

"You see," began her mother, "the grass and all the growing things live very close to the ground, and during long stretches of dry weather they suffer very much from thirst. Of course, you can see for yourself that they are just as far away from the clouds where the rain lives as possibly could be, and so, of course, when they wish to talk with the clouds they must do it through someone who has the power to get as near the sky.

"And so the robin does it for them," interrupted Marion.

"Yes, that is the pretty part of the story," continued her mother.

"It was ever so many years ago, at a time when it only rained when the clouds felt like it. For months the growing things would suffer because they had no water, and many little flowers came the answer.

"You say we can help each other? Please tell me how!" asked the robin, politely.

"Why, you are seeking a great, fat worm," continued the sweet fern bush, "and my people and I want cool water to drink. The soil which we live in is so very dry that the worms just will not come up to the surface."

"And you want me to get you rain?" interrupted the robin, "but how on earth can I?" he added, mystified.

The little sweet fern, in spite of his suffering for lack of water, laughed merrily.

"Why, it is easy," he said, "All you have to do is to fly up to some high tree and sing a beautiful song to the clouds. The rain loves music and will come down to hear it."

"Oh, I will try, I will try," chirped the robin, and flying to the top of a nearby tree, he opened his tiny throat and sang as he had never sung before.

And that night the rain fell and the growing things lifted high their heads and loved the cool, refreshing rain-drops.

"Did the robin get his fat worm?" asked Marion.

"Yes, and many of them," answered her mother.

From the elm tree across the street the song of the robin came again.

That night, as Marion lay awake in bed thinking over the pretty story, she suddenly heard raindrops pattering on the tin roof.

The song of the robin had been answered.

Some Cynic.

A spring poet, whose specialty is cynicism, dashed off the following: "The man who is brave enough to desire to marry the modern girl needs no further test of his courage."

OVERTRAINED.

JAMES—"Aw! I thought I could make the sprint in six minutes flat, teacher, but I'm gittin' so stale dat me road works no good, see?"

FARMER—"We go to bed with the chickens here."

VISITOR—"I say, old chap, it must be beastly unhealthy."

GEORGE V. CROWNED WITH IMPRESSIVE CEREMONIES TODAY

The Queen's coronation to the King and Queen is first extended by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who addresses the assembled guests and through them the people of England, says:

"We here present unto you King George, the undoubted King of this Realm. Wherefore all you who are come this day to do your homage and service, are you willing to do the same?"

The answer of the assembled multitude is given with "God Save the King," and this is taken up and echoed outside, while trumpet sound, announcing the official recognition and the putting on of the crown.

The Archbishop also receives the oath of the King, solemnly promising to govern the people according to the statutes in Parliament and the respective laws and customs of the same, as the Archbishop places the crown upon the King's head, he intones:

"O God, the crown of the faithful: Bless us, however Thou and sanctify this Thy servant George our King; and as Thou dost, this day set a crown of pure gold upon his head, so enrich his royal heart with Thine abundant grace and crown him with all princely virtues, through the King eternal Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen."

The King sits in the historic chair of St. Edward as the crown is placed upon his head. The Dean of Westminster is the custodian of the crown and delivers it to the Archbishop at the moment the latter places it upon the head of the sovereign. This done, the greeting of the assembled guests and the multitude outside is again given and repeated throughout the Kingdom: "God Save the King." The Queen's coronation is accompanied with similar ceremonies of impressive dignity.

The coronation ceremony combines many other features based on tradition and coming down through the ages, including the anointing, the vesting with the mantle and royal robes, the delivery of the orb, the presentation of the Holy Bible, the homage, the introduction, the sermon, the communion, the prayer of consecration, and the Te Deum Laudamus, combining the pomp and pageantry of feudal and medieval ages, with the glitter and outward show of the days of chivalry.

Accompanying the King and Queen and sitting beside them throughout the impressive ceremony, are to be the Duke of Connaught and the young Prince of Wales, the latter wearing the uniform of a naval cadet. Carrying the canopy over the head of the King are to be four knights of the Garter, the Earl of Cadogan, the Earl of Rosebery, the Earl of Grey, and the Earl of Minto. The canopy carried over the head of Queen Mary is borne by four duchesses, namely, the Duchess of Hamilton, the Duchess of Montrose, the Duchess of Portland, and the Duchess of Sutherland. The King's magnificent robe made of the cloth of gold has a train borne by eight pages, namely, the Marquis of Hartington, the Earl of Arlota, Viscount Cranbourne, the Lord Roskill, and four others drawn from the ranks of the nobility.

Many of the foremost men of the Kingdom figure also in the various ceremonies of the coronation. The Duke of Northumberland is the bearer of St. Edward's Crown. The Earl of Beauchamp is the bearer of the sword of state, Earl Roberts is the bearer of the second sword, and Viscount Kitchener is the bearer of the third sword. The Duke of Argyll bears the scepter with the crown. The Bishop of Ulster carries the King's regalia, while the Duke of Somerset, the Duke of Richmond and others bear various other traditional emblems of the coronation.

Queen Mary's crown is borne by the Duke of Devonshire, while the scepter and cross are carried by the Marquis of Waterford, and the ivory rod by the Earl of Durham.

Among the other notable figures in this brilliant throng are to be representatives of foreign rulers and states. These include the Crown Prince and Princess Vojvod of Serbia, Archduke Karl Franz Josef of Austria, the Crown Prince and Princess of Denmark, the Crown Prince of Rumania, Prince Henry of the Netherlands, and other princes and princesses from the royal houses of Europe and the entire world. In all, the official guests comprise 40 members of the royal family, 250 foreign rulers, and representatives of foreign states, 1450 peers and peeresses, 670 members of the House of Lords and House of Commons, 300 ambassadors and ministers and members of the diplomatic corps with their wives, and hundreds of representatives of the clergy, the colonies, the army and navy, and many other branches of governmental administration. The capacity of Westminster Abbey is somewhat over 6,000, and the throng assembled within its walls today are expected to exceed 7,000.

The robes and the crown worn by King George and Queen Mary today attract especial attention. The King wears the coronation in a crimson satin robe. Later during the ceremony he dons the tunic, a long coat made of cloth of gold. The royal robe of state which the King wears during the ceremony is of rich crimson velvet, embellished with heavy gold lace. It has a train of great length and is lined throughout with royal ermine, hundreds of skins being necessary for this purpose. The soft white ermine of this sumptuous robe is dotted with more than 10,000 small pieces of black tulle. The robe worn after the ceremony is of royal purple, and with this the King wears the Imperial Crown.

The crown placed upon the head of King George today is the historic crown of St. Edward. It is of solid gold studded with diamonds, pearls, rubies, emeralds, and sapphires. This crown has passed through some of the dramatic stages of English history, being destroyed at one time in the uprising against monarchical authority, and replaced later for the coronation of Charles II.

The Queen's scepter with the cross is of gold ornamented with diamonds and other precious stones. The Queen's coronation ring is also of gold set with rubies. There are many other traditional features of the coronation which figure in today's ceremonies, including the royal scepter, the sword of state, the four swords of spiritual justice, temporal justice, etc., the great golden spurs, the ring of alliance, and many other quaint and beautiful survivals of ancient days.

The American representation at the coronation pageant will include the American Ambassador, Whiteley Reid, accompanied by Mrs. Reid, and the American special ambassador, Mr. John Hays Hammond with his wife and daughter. Mr. Reid will be attended by the officials of the American Embassy, including the Secretary of the Embassy, Mr. William Phillips and Mrs. Phillips; the naval attaché, Commander Simpson and Mrs. Simpson; and the military attaché, Major Sloan and Mrs. Sloan.

The American special ambassador, Mr. Hammond, has his military aide General Grosvenor, and his naval aide Admiral Vreeland. Although hundreds of prominent Americans have attempted to secure admission to the Abbey, if any, have been successful. President Taft's brother, Mr. Charles P. Taft, and the latter's wife, are among the few not holding official positions who have been granted seats in the Abbey. This was done by the command of King George on the suggestion of the British ambassador to Washington, Mr. James Bryce.

The American wives of English members of the nobility figure prominently in the exercises of the day. Among these are three duchesses, namely, the Duchess of Roxburgh, the Duchess of Manchester and the Duchess of Marlborough, formerly Miss Cholmondeley of Newport, Miss Zimmerman of Chesham, and Miss Vanderbilt of New York respectively. Others are the Marchioness of Dufferin, formerly Miss Davis of New York; the Countess of Essex, formerly Miss Grant of New York; the Countess of Suffolk, formerly Miss Lister of Washington; the Countess of Granard, formerly Miss Mills of New York; the Countess of Balmaghie, formerly Miss Grace of New York; the Countess of Devon, formerly Miss Martin of New York; and the Countess of Tankerville, formerly Miss van Marter of New York.

Other American wives of British peers are the Viscountess Falkland; Lady Chesham; Lady Newborough; Lady Mansel; Lady Louth; Lady Ashburton and Lady Bateman. Many princes from East India in their gorgeous costumes are to be in attendance. They include the Sultan of Perak and the Sultan of Kedah, and the honorary Indian noble-de-camp of the King, including the Maharajah of Idar, Gwalior and Bikanir, who with the Gwalior of Baroda, are among the special guests, but the Indian delegation is restricted on this occasion owing to the King's intention to visit India later on and hold an imperial durbar at Delhi.

The special ambassadors and envoys of those States and republics represented by princes form an interesting group, together with the delegations from the overseas British colonies. The latter include the prime ministers of the Dominion of Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier; Commonwealth of Australia, Mr. Andrew Fisher; of New Zealand, Sir Joseph George Ward; of South Africa, the Right Hon. Louis Botha, and the Newfoundland, Sir Edward P. Morris.

Besides the foregoing, the prime ministers of New South Wales, Tasmania, Western Australia, Victoria, New Brunswick, Ontario, Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island and Quebec take their places, while the representatives of the Bahamas, Bermuda, British Honduras, etc., complete the group.

Westminster Abbey, the venerable edifice which has witnessed the crowning of many Kings and Queens and then has become their final resting place, along with England's poet, authors and statesmen, has been prepared on a most elaborate scale for the coronation ceremonies of today.

The scheme of decoration of the famous cathedral on the banks of the river Thames was originated and carried out by the Office of Works. Hugo Standa have been erected on the square and on the turf all along the Abbey front for the seating of guests. These stupas have altered the familiar appearance of the church to a considerable degree, although efforts have been made to lend an air of age to these stupas additions. The space in the Abbey is very limited and before it was possible to take into consideration any of the thousands of applications for invitations from the distinguished visitors and others desirous of being present, it became necessary for the Office of Works to provide sitting room for no fewer than 4,040 official guests.

The stands outside are covered with red and gold draperies, but as they become filled with the distinguished assemblage of invited guests, these colors are blotted out by the brilliant uniforms of the men and the gowns of the women, until the whole scene becomes one of animated color.

Inside the Abbey there has been comparatively little attempt at display, beyond that necessary in connection with the structural decorations for the seating of the spectators and the coronation ceremonial. The old gray arches lend their stately perspective to the scene, unobscured by flags or any gleam of color. Resting on the foundation of a splendid pile carpet of Royal blue, into which are worked the emblems of the Order of the Garter and other heraldic designs, the central figures of the historic pictures are grouped in their gorgeous robes.

Outside the twin towers of Westminster Abbey rise grandly above the temporary additions, and with the stately House of Lords and the whole block of Parliament buildings, make an impressive background to the picture. In response to many petitions from participants in the Coronation ceremonial, the Office of Works has decided to permit those present to purchase as souvenirs the chairs and stools on which they sat, all of which are marked with the word "Coronation" and embossed with the crown and the date of the occurrence.

The gorgeous street preparations for the Coronation have been in progress for weeks. They reach their climax at Westminster Abbey and the streets immediately in the vicinity of the cathedral. The troops present are the picked regiments of the army, and the bands of music the best the English barracks, and the seven sea dominions could send out.

The main thoroughfares of the city, where they are not flanked by reviewing stands for official and distinguished guests, are given over to handsome and in many cases, unique schemes of decoration either at the hands of the authorities or by private individuals, or in countless private stands for spectators, each competing with the other for brilliancy and beauty of effect. One long street is flanked by 64 massive columns, each bearing gilt figures of victory, lions and griffins, and connected with swinging garlands of oak and laurel leaves, with clusters of roses at intervals.

The decorations are most lavish and massive in the near vicinity of Westminster Abbey. Trafalgar Square is one mass of color, while the vistas down Whitehall, Cockspur street, Pall Mall, St. James street and Piccadilly, are magnificent and bewildering with countless flags, bunting, garlands and wreaths and festoons of flowers.

Night illuminations have been projected to add a splendor to the scene that the light of day could not give. London, on coronation night, doubtless will be more brilliantly illuminated than any other spot in the world.

Among the notable buildings that are to be resplendent and glowing in electric lights, fashioned to form expressions of loyalty and good wishes to the King and Queen, are the Bank of London, the Royal Exchange and the Mansion House, numberless clubs and big business houses; Dorchester House, the residence of Whiteley Reid, the American Ambassador; the offices of the American Embassy in Victoria street, and Stratton House, Piccadilly, the residence occupied by John Hays Hammond, the special American Ambassador to the coronation.

Nor are the illuminations to be limited to London. Every city in the provinces is to have its display of electric and gas lighting tonight; the vessels of the British fleet in the Channel are to be ablaze with twinkling decorations and the dunes of their powerful searchlights, and throughout the United Kingdom, cities are to be illuminated tonight and enthusiastic demonstrations are to be held to celebrate the coronation of George V and Mary III.

Washington, June 22.—The house refused to accept the bill for direct election of United States senators in the form in which it passed the senate, and by a vote of 172 to 112 sent the measure to conference. The Bratton amendment was the only change made by the senate, and it was because of refusal to accept this amendment that the house voted for conference. The vote was on strictly party lines, one Republican—Sen. of Tennessee—voting with the Democrats, and one Democrat—Bark of Wisconsin—with the Republicans.

His Verdict

Young Samuel Seymour was a new member of the club and a comparative stranger in the neighborhood. As he and his friend Sexton stood watching the dancers young Seymour said: "I saw you bow to that vivacious girl in pink. I wish you would introduce me. She has the most delightful lip I ever heard of mortal lips."

"I'll be glad to introduce you, my boy," said young Sexton. "Miss Marsh is as delightful as her lip. But let me hasten to warn you never to let your feelings carry you so far as to make any mention in her presence of her soft s's. You see before you a stricken being. I once had hopes in that direction myself, but long ago I had to resign them, and all because in an unlucky moment I spoke out of the fullness of my heart of her charming lip."

"Miss Marsh looked as surprised and offended as if I had accused her of a theft and then she said: 'Why, Mithter Thekthton, I thertainly do not lthp. I would not be thought to lthp for all the world. Only affected people lthp.'"

"Well, I was afraid that I saw my lthp right there, but I hastened to apologize. I explained to her that it was not exactly a lip and that I should have called it merely a delightful little peculiarity of speech that was all her own. I particularly insisted that it was thoroughly charming, whatever it was. She was very gracious, but the mischief had been done. I soon discovered that she was never quite comfortable in my presence and, in fact, was inclined to be silent and shy. So it has come about that now we have merely a formal acquaintance."

"Behold my magnanimity!" went on young Sexton. "It doesn't seem fair that you should profit by my hard experience, but since I have lost her I suppose it doesn't matter who wins: so come with me and show me how well you can profit by my coaching."

They found Miss Marsh in a chatting group, and young Sexton asked the privilege of presenting his friend, Mr. Seymour. Miss Marsh smiled and showed a row of dimples.

"I am the happy to know you, Mithter Theymour," she said. "Don't you think we are having a beautiful dthn? It lth given by our thortority, and we thnk the decorations are ekthquithle."

Both young men heartily agreed with her, in a manner which showed their conviction that she herself was one of the most decorative of the decorations.

"No, Mr. Theymour," proceeded Miss Marsh. "Mr. Thexton and I differ on a thertain thubject and I know you will be an impartial Judge, becauth you are not accuthomed to my manner of thpeech and would be thure to notth any peculiarity—a lthp, for lthanth. You know, if I thought I lthped, I should take a vow of etthnal thlthth; for I think lthping lth the moth lthane and thlly habit one could have."

Young Seymour smiled at her as he replied: "Miss Marsh, I am sorry to say that George is given to dreamth, and thls is surely one of hls dream. You lthp? Well, I should say not."

"I knew you would dethlde in my favor," said Miss Marsh, with a happy countenance, "for an impartial Judge would have to."

After a month of delightful acquaintance with Miss Marsh young Seymour could not have told if she lthped, stammered, or was tongue thd. So wholly charming had he found her that he would not have asked the slightest change in her if she had manifested all three peculiarities—if such a thing were possible!

He had become her shadow and she bubbled over with happiness and effluence with laughter and showered soft s's upon him until he became hopelessly enmeshed.

When the engagement had been announced and the wedding day set, she said to him one day in a burst of confidence: "Dear Thim, I am going to tell you a thertot. You know that the many people thay I lthp that I was quite dlththred. Mr. Thexton thought I lthped. And I am thure one reuthon I loved you from the flrth wath that you did not think I lthped. I could never be happy with a man who thought I lthped."

"No one but an lthot would ever say you lthped," answered truthful young Seymour. "Forget thot ally people have said juft to tease you. If you should lthp only a lthle I would be thure to notth it."

"Of course I'll do ath you thay, Thim," she replied, happily.

MORE DECORATIONS FOR J. PIERPONT?

Rumors Are Abroad That France Will Offer to Make Him Knight of Legion of Honor.

Paris, June 22.—Will J. Pierpont Morgan be made a Knight of the Legion of Honor by the French government in recognition of acts of courtesy to the government, and would Morgan accept the decoration in the event of its being offered?

Since the American multi-millionaire bought the famous "Chef de St. Martin" which was stolen from a church in southern France, and gave this exceedingly valuable art object to the Louvre Museum here, it has been unofficially, but tacitly understood that something ought to be done for the king of finance besides merely to thank him. Usually a decoration is the thing. There is a rumor here that the proposition has been put up to him tentatively. What Morgan replied is not included in the report.

TAFT SEES HOPE IN HIGH COURT DECISIONS

First Utterance on Oil and Tobacco Decrees Is Message to Honest Business Men.

New Haven, Conn., June 22.—In a speech at the Yale alumni annual luncheon here President Taft made his first public comment upon the Standard Oil and tobacco trust decisions and declared that the decrees had pointed out a clear road that the honest business man might travel in safety.

It was the first public reference the president has made to these decisions and was evoked by the conferring of the Yale faculty of the honorary degree of laws upon Associate Justice Joseph Rucker Lamar, who was appointed to the Supreme court by President Taft.

"I believe these decisions," said the president, "have done and will continue to do great good to all the business of the country, and that they have laid down a line of distinction that it is not difficult for honest business men to follow."

The president took reflected credit, he said, from the five appointments he had made to the Supreme court.

History, he added, will show the wisdom of his selections, but the decisions in the two big cases, he declared, proved almost conclusively that he had chosen well.

PROMOTER ENDS LIFE IN JAIL

Oscar F. Spalto Is Alleged to Have Swindled Detroiters.

Detroit, Mich., June 22.—Oscar F. Spalto of Boston, promoter, arrested here and held as a suspicious character, committed suicide in Central police station by taking poison. A vial of cyanide of potassium had been taken from Spalto and the police did not know he had any more poison concealed about him. Spalto influenced several Detroiters to invest in an enterprise here known as the General Electric Inspection company.

San Francisco, June 22.—The supreme court has affirmed the largest judgment ever awarded in this state for personal injuries. The Southern Pacific Railway company must pay Willard R. Clibbell of Fresno, who was run over by a train, $70,000.

Taft's New York Engagements.

New York, June 22.—Fresh from a pleasant reunion with many of his old college chums at Yale, President Taft arrived in New York today in acceptance of invitations to address the New York bankers and the Canadian Club tonight. The Aldrich currency plan and reciprocity will furnish him with subjects for his two speeches.

SUES FOR INJURIES IN STORAGE VAULT

Washington Man Sues $25,000 Damages for Being Locked in Cold Storage Plant on Hot Day.

Washington, June 22.—How much would you give—during this hundred-degree weather—to be incarcerated in a cold storage room for a little while? Doesn't it strike you that it would make life more worth the living and add spice to the enjoyment of things in general?

Nevertheless, a Washingtonian by the name of Samuel L. Boxwell—a very appropriate cognomen, by the way—has entered a suit against a local market company for "injuries" which he alleges he received while locked in the cold storage plant of the company on June 1.

Washington on June 1 was suffering from an extremely hot spell and the inhabitants were wishing that they could get anywhere to obtain relief from the sweltering heat. But Boxwell, according to his sworn statement, was unconsciously thrust in to the cold storage room and detained there for half an hour, much against his will.

Instead of thanking the market company when he emerged from his cool sojourn, Boxwell proceeded at once to his attorney's and a suit for $25,000 damages for his alleged injuries was the result. He claims that his health has been injured by the experience and that $25,000 a minute is not too much recompense.

AUTO RACING TO BE DEAD ISSUE SOON

Milwaukee, June 22.—"Automobile racing will be a dead issue on enclosed circular dirt tracks inside of three years." Thus spoke Barney Oldfield, former "speed king" of the world, today, discussing the fatal accident to Arthur Donnelly at the state fair park yesterday. Oldfield has retired from auto racing and now represents a tire concern.

POWDER TRUST HELD ILLEGAL

Delaware Circuit Court Orders Combination to Be Dissolved.

Wilmington, Del., June 22.—The government won its suit to dissolve the alleged powder trust in a decision handed down here by Judge Landis in the United States circuit court.

The decision recites that the company violated specifically section one of the Sherman law, which relates to interstate commerce in powder and explosives, and section two, which relates to monopolies.

The court fixes October 16 as the date to hear both sides in consideration of such a plan for dissolving the combination as will not "deprive the defendants of the opportunity to recreate, out of the elements now composing the combination, a new condition which shall be honestly in harmony with and not repugnant to the law."

URBANA HOST TO ILLINOIS BAR

Important Matters Are Discussed at Association's Annual Meeting.

Urbana, Ill., June 22.—In the law school building of the University of Illinois the members of the Illinois State Bar association met today for their annual gathering, with President William R. Curran of Pekin in the chair. Representative lawyers from about every city in the state were present, and most of them are accompanied by their wives for whom various social affairs have been planned.

So that he can continue his studies, begun in jail, of the "New Thought." And—that justice may be done—"I am innocent of wife murder" is his cry.

The formal supreme court mandate sending the physician to the Joliet penitentiary may come any day. It is expected before the court takes recess.

"After I am sent to Joliet," said Clemenson, "I shall apply for a pardon through my attorneys and my a new trial has been refused."

Chicago, Ill.—With only the mandate of the supreme court lacking as the final formality to send him to the state penitentiary for life as a wife murderer, Dr. Hildane Clemenson is already planning in the county jail a fight for a pardon, which he said today he wants for these reasons:

So that he can go away to some foreign land like China as a "medical missionary" to save lives and instill better ideals in the unenlightened.

So that he can continue to preach out in the wide world clean living to young men as he has been preaching it for two years in jail.

"GOLDEN CROWN"
BEER

There are those in Janesville who will frown when they read this headline, but they know nothing of GOLDEN CROWN Beer and its tonic qualities.

Scientists and chemists say that one pint of good beer contains more nutriment than a quart of milk; than 20 ounces of round steak; that it is a better appetizer than whiskey or wine, a better table beverage than coffee or tea.

"GOLDEN CROWN"

Beer, you know, is a pure brew of malt and hops which has been thoroughly aged before being offered for sale.

GOLDEN CROWN BEER

is of inestimable value to invalids and those who are constitutionally weak and easily fatigued, for it imparts vim and vitality and makes for physical strength. It's an ideal hot weather drink; cools, rests and refreshes.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON.

I'VE ASKED five people and they all said they thought this was the best thing to do.

So Molly, the little stenographer lady, told me the other day.

We were talking over a decision she had to make. The course which, I happen to know, in her inmost heart she really wants to follow. Do you know I think the psychology of advice is a most interesting subject. Did you ever think about it?

Nine people out of ten—casual people, I mean; not your real close friends who have your welfare enough at heart to really put some thought in the matter—if you ask their advice will advise you to do the thing they think you want to do.

Sometimes they do this consciously and intentionally. I know a girl who frankly says: "If anyone asks my advice I always feel around to find what they want me to say and then say it. It's a tip top way to make people like you and think your judgment is good."

Incidentally, she was one of the five people Molly had been consulting.

But often times your counselors are quite unconscious that they are doing this. It is simply that by your desire to have them think a certain thing you unintentionally hypnotize them into your way of thinking.

The desire may be subconscious with you. You may not even think you know what you want to do. And the influence you exercise may not be recognized by them, but that is what happens just the same, and one should take it into account in reckoning the value of advice.

This giving advice is a queer business anyway. People go about it with such extraordinary irresponsibility.

You know the old riddle, "What is it that everybody likes to give and nobody cares to take?" and its answer, "Advice."

Isn't it strange that we can feel that way about it?

Suppose you give a piece of advice about a comparatively small matter—whether your friend shall go to this place or that for her summer vacation, for instance.

Suppose she takes your advice and goes to Camp It. Instead of Hotel M. Very well. At Camp It, she meets a man who falls desperately in love with her. Her parents dislike him and violently oppose the match. They send for a favorite sister to come and argue with her. The sister on her way to do this, is killed in a railroad accident. In the meantime, the girl has eloped and with the two calamities the mother's heart is quite broken. Now at Hotel M. she might have met just the right man.

Think how your advice changed the current not only of her life, but of other lives and how it will change the current of lives to be to the third and fourth generation—may to the very end of the world.

It's like throwing a pebble into a pond. The pebble not only disturbs the water in its immediate vicinity, but starts ripples that reach distant shores.

Truly, I wonder how, instead of being so glib with our peddling of advice, we dare throw the very thinnest and into the pool of one friend's life.

Heart and Home Talks

About the Children.

A Child's Education as H. G. Wells Sees it.

H. G. WELLS, the novelist, in one of his books, has a father, in discussing his child's education, say:

"There is his imagination to be fed. That, after all, is the crown of every education, the crown, as sound habits of mind and conduct are the throne. No imagination at all is brutality; a base imagination is lust and cowardice, but a noble imagination is God walking the earth again. He must dream, too, in due time, of a dainty fairy land, and of all the quaint little things of life. But he must look chiefly on the splendid real. He shall have stories of travel through all the world, travels and adventures, and how the world was won. He shall have stories of hearts; great books, splendidly and clearly done, of animals and birds and plants and creeping things; great books about the depths of the sky and the mystery of the sea. He shall have histories and maps of all the empires the world has seen, pictures and stories of all the tribes and habits and customs of men. If I had a choice of giving my son a complete formal education without developing his imaginative faculty, or of developing that and having him otherwise uneducated, I should prefer the latter class."

There is much food for thought in that. A child fed on the quaint things of life, on the depths of the sky, the mystery of the sea, the facts of birds and plants, and creeping things, the tribes and habits and customs of men, would certainly have high ideals and great ambitions. He would be tender to all dumb things. He would have a love of the beautiful, and a deep joy in nature. And if he did not know a lot about triangles and cube roots and unknown quantities, he would have a grasp on the real things of life that bring joy.

The most vivid thing about a child is his imagination. Through it, one can appeal to almost every faculty he possesses. Anything will answer for a toy, if it is clothed by the imagination. Clothespins will become valiant soldiers, a stick will do dandy work as a gun, a few bushes will become a forest in which savages lurk. Robert Louis Stevenson, in one of his verses, tells of a terrible pirate that lurks behind the sofa, and of how commonplace the older folks seem, because they calmly sit and read with such a bloodthirsty person around.

Work can be made attractive in the same way. If properly imagined to a child. What mother has not got good, steady work out of a youngster by pretending it was this, that or the other that he was doing.

The power of a child's imagination is not appreciated as it should be by many. An appeal to it wakens him all over, and this is what the faculties of many a child need. Studies in which he takes no interest could be made attractive to him in this way. But almost anything would be given value to him, if put before his imagination rightly.

Ruskin's mother pursued this course. No toys were allowed her son. If any were given him, they were put away. He was thrown upon his own resources for amusement. She compelled him to use his imagination to invent the ordinary things about him with interest.

It certainly is a point for parents and teachers to think upon. Older people are apt to lack imagination, and so do not appreciate its value to the childish mind. But if one could give a child some such education as Wells pictures, surely he would be better fitted for life than are many who are now educated by some of our school systems.

The KITCHEN CABINET

The successful statesman, or artist, or scientist.

—T. Roosevelt.

Sweets as Food.

The sugar found in all ripe fruits is in a form most acceptable. Children who are given dates, raisins and figs will not crave sugar and candy. Fruit sugars are ready for assimilation, while cane sugar must undergo digestion in both the stomach and intestines.

Milk sugar is like fruit sugar; does not undergo a change in the digestive tract, and is naturally perfectly assimilable, which proves, as we say in geometry, that cow's milk diluted with water and sweetened with cane sugar, is not wholesome for infant feeding.

Those who have studied the subject say that more children are killed each year by table sugar than by disease. A point which will appeal to most women is that the candy or sugar habit is largely the cause of bad liver, sick headache and muddy skins. Starch in large quantities will cause the same result, as starch is changed to sugar in the process of digestion, and stored in the liver; so if we take more than the body can use it overcrowds the liver and causes biliousness and kindred evils.

Cane sugar is, of course, a natural sweet, as is maple sugar, but a barrel of the juice is necessary to make a pound of sugar. It is the large amount which we consume that causes the trouble.

How to cultivate an appetite for sweets. It is dangerous.

When your child is irritable, unreasonable and unmanageable, look into his diet before allowing yourself to criticize, as it may be wholly your method of feeding which has caused the disorder. Children when well trained and fed are naturally happy and agreeable, and when they are otherwise it is often the fault of the parents, who are either too careless or too indifferent to study the real cause.

Baby fed children crave sweets as the fathers who are poorly nourished crave strong drink.

SECOND ARTICLE ON HOUSEHOLD LABORS

Mrs. Hield's Paper on Planning Week's Work For Family of Five Printed Below.

In the following article by Mrs. Hield, which was awarded second place in the recent contest, that of planning the household work for a family of five where the mother does her own work, many useful suggestions will be found. The article is as follows:

There are no two housekeepers who could follow exactly the same plan of work for even one week, and I doubt if any one of us could follow the same plan in every detail, two weeks in succession. I give a working plan and advise all housekeepers to write out a plan to suit their own needs, then work to the line of this plan as nearly as possible, without causing "family larks" or making anyone uncomfortable. What we ought to plan for is to make the whole family as healthful, comfortable, useful and happy as possible, always having ready a hearty welcome for the choice guest as well as the invited one, and last, but not least, to conserve our own strength and nerves, that we may make a happy time, where there are little children, these plans of work I give will often have to be changed to meet their needs and more than one washing a week is often needed, and many little extras that take time from the sewing and rest hours.

Never let the work drive you, but keep it well in hand for if it gets the upperhand it will make a veritable slave of any woman, and instead of being pitted you are usually blamed, both by those in the home and those outside. If the work is more than you can do with what assistance you can get from the home members and can not hire, then simplify the work so it can be done. There are many short cuts in housework and helps, if only followed would make housekeeping much easier. I believe it was with this thought in view that the editors of the Gazette gave us this chance of helping each other. A good motto for housekeepers is, "what must be done let it be done calmly" and early rising in the warm weather is a boon to any housekeeper for so much can be done while the day is fresh and cool.

TRANSPLANTING OF TOBACCO CROP IS NEARLY COMPLETED

Entire Crop in This State Will be in the Fields the Earliest in History of Trade.

With the close of the present week practically the entire tobacco crop will be in the fields which, it is stated, is the earliest time of completing the work of transplanting in the history of the tobacco trade in this state.

Other years may have seen detached fields planted at an early date in June, but never has the entire crop been out at such an early date before. At the beginning of the week it was estimated that fully seventy-five percent of the acreage in Rock county was set out. It is safe to say that by Saturday the amount remaining to be planted will be very small.

Growers have met with favorable conditions for raising plants and for the transplanting operations, which accounts for the advance state of the work at present. Hot weather during the early part of the month was the only handicap encountered, and that caused but little damage as the rains which followed did much to revive the plants. Tobacco set the first of this week is not suffering from the excessive heat. The reason for this is that the ground is so moist and in such fine condition that growth is started very soon after planting. Dews also have aided in reviving the plants after the heat of the day.

All the earlier fields have been cultivated by this time and growth has been started. Present indications are most favorable and with the sufficient amount of moisture a bumper crop in Wisconsin is predicted for the season.

SEVERE CENSORSHIP OF NEWS IN ITALY

Newspaper Correspondents in Rome Find It Next to Impossible to Send Out News.

(BY UNITED PRESS.)

London, June 22.—Italy is rapidly becoming as mysterious a country as Tibet. Governmental suppression of news has been growing steadily more and more thorough for the past two or three years until a point has been reached where practically nothing at all gets out except formal official announcements of purely routine events.

"The censorship is so severe," says a communication which the London Chronicle's Rome correspondent sent to slip through, "that it is next to impossible to send any news. Communications intended for the foreign newspapers, whether dispatched by telegraph, telephone or letter post, all meet the same fate. They are held up and refused transmission on one pretext or another. The foreign correspondents resident in Rome have no redress. Deputation after deputation has waited upon Premier Giolitti, but nothing has come of it. Further protest might lead to expulsion from the country, so the correspondents bow in submission before the will of the dictator of Italy."

The United Press Association's own Rome correspondent himself narrowly escaped expulsion from Italian territory recently as a result of a dispatch pointing to the danger of a serious cholera epidemic in the country before the end of the summer. Only a showing that the message was not filed from Rome, but from the French side of the frontier and that the correspondent was in Rome at the time saved him.

Portuguese Strict.

Lisbon via Madrid, June 22.—Having abolished the press and telegraph censorship, the Portuguese government has invented a new offense to take its place—that of "propagating false news." Offensive news messages, filed at any of the government telegraph offices are not now, as they used to be, refused transmission under the censorship law. They are held up, however, as "injurious to the public welfare." The offenders are at the same time arrested for "propagating false news," and either held indefinitely in prison or expelled from Portugal.

The same penalties are enforced against persons publishing anti-government news in Portuguese papers, sending anti-government opinions through the mails or even expressing them in conversation.

Nonsensical Idea.

A London physician has made the suggestion that condemned criminals should drink river water in its "raw" state, that the effects might be observed. Presumably it would only mean cases of typhoid to be cured at the expense of the state.

Measuring a Field.

The area of any rectangular piece of land, that is, one the corners of which are squares, is obtained by multiplying the length by the breadth.

WAR MANEUVERS ON SEA ARE PLANNED

Navy Department Planning To Carry On War Game in Narragansett Bay And Long Island Sound Next Month

Washington, June 22.—A war game upon more elaborate and comprehensive scale before will be enacted by the battleship fleet in conjunction with the torpedo divisions and the naval militia squadron this summer, according to present plans of the Navy Department.

The war game, which will begin about July 10, will be played in Narragansett Bay and the eastern entrance to Long Island Sound. The vessels of the Naval militia, together with the torpedo fleet, will defend the bay and the sound against a simulated attack by the Atlantic battleship fleet.

This maneuvering will form a part of the Naval militia, which will be held on the North Atlantic coast from July 15 to July 25. The greater part of the naval militia of the North Atlantic states will be on board the former naval vessels Chicago, Machias, Tonopah, Vixen, Idaho, Cuba, Rodgers, Allen and Sylva, while the remainder will be placed on board the battleships.

The militia fleet will rendezvous at Gardiner's Bay, L. I., proceeding thence to the defense of the Sound after a few days of preliminary exercises. After the war game is over the fleet will return to Gardiner's Bay for additional target practice and drills.

The war game will be "worth" be a part of the annual program of the Naval militia. The Navy Department considers this important, as the role of the Naval militia in time of war will be that of coast defense.

It is hoped that the scope of the exercises may be increased in the near future by obtaining the cooperation and interest of the certain yacht clubs, since it is well known that several motor boats and small steamers which will prove an important military asset in war for the defense of harbors and the coast generally.

ASIATIC CHOLERA SCARE UNFOUNDED

Danger is Minimized Owing to Work Done by U. S. Public Health and Marine Hospital Service.

(BY UNITED PRESS.)

Washington, June 22.—The United States Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, which takes care that no contagious diseases are brought into this country and, at the same time, guards the internal welfare of the people, states that the annual scare with regard to the appearance of Asiatic cholera in this country has been less foundation this year than at other times in the past, owing to the work done by the Service in Italy during the past two years.

A large percentage of the cholera which is brought into this country comes from Palermo, Naples, Rome, Venice and Genoa. It has been found that a number of the immigrants sailing from any of these ports have been predisposed to the disease. The living conditions in Italy are such that cholera gains an easy foothold among the poorer classes and is exceedingly hard to root out.

The Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, however, has had special hospitals at Naples and Genoa—the two principal Italian sailing ports—for the past two years in an effort to prevent all emigrants who show the least sign of having the disease from carrying it to the United States. In addition to this the United States has been instrumental in getting the Italian government to keep clean the poorer sections of the cities. It is stated that the conditions are not nearly as bad now as they were two years ago, before the Service took charge.

After the cholera epidemic of twenty years ago, the entire water supply of the city of Naples was changed, owing to the influence of foreign governments, and it is expected that the wave of the disease which started in the spring of 1910 will have a similar effect in cleaning up some of the cesspools and other breeding places for cholera germs.

As a result of the reports of the Marine Hospital Service regarding the prevalence of cholera in Italy—despite the reports of the Italian authorities to the contrary—the number of American tourists during the past winter was barely one third as large as in 1910. It is thought that this will have the effect of cleaning up their cities into their own hands, for the success of the two exhibitions now in progress in Italy depends for a large measure upon the number of tourists, particularly Americans, who attend.

Reports state, however, that owing to the great diminution in the number of cases of cholera, there is not the least danger that the disease will spread to this country, even though one or two isolated cases may make their appearance on steamers sailing from European ports.

COOKVILLE LAD WAR BADLY INJURED MONDAY

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)

Joseph Larson, Who Had Head Cut and Chest Crushed by Falling Plank, is Reported Better at Present.

Cookville, June 22.—Joseph Larson, a young son of John Larson, was seriously injured on Monday afternoon. He was at the home of Oscar Eyer and was at play with other boys in the barn, when in some way he ran against a post that supported a plank and the latter fell, cutting a deep gash in the head and crushing the chest bone. He was taken immediately to Staughton hospital and it was some time before he regained consciousness. He is at present a little better.

BRITZ HEADQUARTERS

BY MARION BARBER

ILLUSTRATIONS BY BOB

The millionaire's discomfort was augmented a thousandfold by this scene between the women. He shifted his weight from one foot to the other, crumpled the rim of his derby hat until it bent like the brim of an Alpine, and at length, unable to view the girl's distress with anything like equanimity, he walked to the other end of the reception-room and stood looking through the giant latticework at the tide of traffic in Centre Street.

It was not until the widow had restored his calmness, not until she had assured the trembling prisoner of her love, confidence, and full belief in her innocence a hundred times, not until their emotion had affected even the matron long inured to human woes, that the girl saw Sands. His sturdy bulk, the square set of his shoulders, the uncompromising fidelity in his strong face, gave her a new sense of pleasure. Surely her case could not be desperate with two such loyal friends to defend her! For the space of a star-bush, she forgot even Fitch, although her lover at that moment was hastening uptown with Britz in quest of the missing thread that should lead to her vindication. Still with her arm around Mrs. Masloner's waist, she extended her hand to Sands, and thanked him in a way more effective than any mere girlish prettiness for the proof of his faith in her that he had given in coming with Mrs. Masloner to see her.

"Not that it would take much persuasion to make you accompany Doris anywhere," she said with a smile, and she was not at all remorseful when she noted the dark flush of pleasure that spread over his features. "But I cannot help taking comfort in the fact that you have come to see me, and that very evidently it has cost you no struggle to do so. If all of you could only know what these long weeks have been to me, you would understand how deeply the sight of old friends affects me. Here I have been in a world apart. The poor creatures who share this dreadful home with me only make my situation worse, for I can do nothing for them, and yet the sight of their misery distresses me beyond words."

Ellnor did not know how much she had been spared by the consideration of the warden in assigning her to a tier of cells in which the more brutal inmates of the Tombs never were confined. She had had only a glance of the nether depths. Grave though the charges against her were, the good old man, whom an accident of politics had placed in control of the prison, had recognized from the first that she was of finer mould than anyone who had been entrusted to his custody in his whole term of office, and he had seen to it that her eyes and ears were not assaulted by the sights and scenes of the blacker depths. Years passed, and Ellnor was a woman of much graver maturity as she knew how much of misery she had escaped.

The visit of Mrs. Masloner and Sands did Ellnor so much good that, when they went away, it was with a lighter heart she returned to her cell, with renewed courage she steered herself to await the efforts of the good friends and the devoted lover who knew were working to clear her name of the frightful charge Donnelly and Carson had lodged against her.

Her confidence in Dr. Fitch was not misplaced, for in the short time when Mrs. Masloner in her limousine was speeding back to her home in Millionaires' Row, and Sands, in a broughtain, was returning to his office in the Bowling Green building, Fitch and Britz were standing on a Fourth Avenue corner a short distance north of Twenty-third Street, gazing with dismay at a twenty-story skyscraper that stood on the site of the little old curio shop to which duty had called the young ambulance surgeon years before.

"You are sure this is the place," asked the detective.

"Absolutely," said the doctor. "I went over there to get some brandy for the old man when I was working him out of his stupor."

"Well," said the sleuth, "so far as that old curio shop is concerned, we're up against it; or, what is worse, we are not up against it. We are confronted by this steel and stone monstrosity, and I guess there's no use wanting time making inquiries there; but there may be a few old-timers with memories along this block, and we'll see what we can find out. You take that side of the street, and I'll take this."

Britz and Fitch went into one shop after another, patiently repeating persistent inquiries as to what had become of the veteran curio dealer. Blank stares and equally blank answers were the result until Britz, in a tiny tobacco shop that was the center of all the old-time places huddled together for protection against the encroachment of progress, unearthed a memory incarnate in a man, who, Fitch said, might have been the twin brother of the amateur alchemist.

"Yes," said the man, "I remember him, and it's a funny thing to me that anybody who ever saw him could ever forget him. He was the queerest little old duck I ever ran across."

Britz thought if anyone could be queerer than the ancient tobaccoist he would have to step out of a page of Dickens.

The incarnate memory recalled that the curio dealer had been taken away a week or two before his shop was torn down to clear the ground for the foundation work of the great skyscraper. No, he didn't go away. He was taken away.

"Anything wrong with him?" asked Britz.

"Well, not exactly what you might call wrong, so to speak," quavered the old tobacco merchant. "I wouldn't go so far as to say there was anything you might exactly call wrong with him, but neither would I undertake to tell you that he was altogether what you might call right," and he touched his forehead significantly.

"Oh!" said Britz, "Ward's or Randall's?"

"Iuh," said the old tobaccoist, "I don't know what you mean."

"Why," said the detective, "what I mean is did they take him to the Asylum or to the Workhouse?"

"I reckon it wouldn't have been any use to take him to the Workhouse," said the tobacco dealer, "because, as far as I know, he never does no work in all his life, and he was too old a dog to learn the habit by that time. No, I guess they took him to the other place; but what do you want to know for? Are you missing heirs?"

Britz and Fitch laughed.

"No," he said, "my friend here just wants to break up an old acquaintance."

tion for the work twelve months ago, or possibly more."

"Oh," said the physician, "there is one flaw in your theory. He was not a fakir. All the information I gleaned about him convinced me he was not engaged in the manufacture of bogus jewels. His grand purpose in life was to make real diamonds."

"Precisely," said Britz. "It is that fact, much more than anything else, that leads me to think he may be in the employ of the persons we are trailing. Doesn't it occur to you that the false Maharajah, in order to deceive Mrs. Masloner and all her friends for so long a time, must have been such a beautiful piece of work that it could not have been intended as an imitation? In other words, didn't the man who made the imitation Maharajah believe he was manufacturing a genuine diamond?"

The little boat grated its nose against the island pier, and the two investigators sprang ashore. As soon as they entered the asylum grounds, their positions were reversed. Fitch became the monitor, Britz the willing pupil, for in that abode of darkened reason were medical men whose hourly association with that phase of existence made them welcome gladly visitors from the outer world—especially members of their own profession. Fitch, as he ran up the steps of the visitors' entrance, was received royally in the office by three or four physicians and surgeons who had known him in his halcyon days. There was no jealousy of his success among them. He had shot ahead of several of them, and it was pretty well understood among the island doctors that Lawrence Fitch was rapidly forging to the fore as a fashionable physician. What was more important in their eyes was the fact that he had gained real distinction in his profession. Several minor but helpful discoveries of his had been rewarded gratefully in the "Lancet," and more than once his name had been mentioned with flattering recognition at meetings of the County Medical Society.

Fitch was now in his element. He grasped warmly the hands held out to him, clapped two or three of his closer crannies on the back, and presented Britz to the little group with a few words of introduction that won respect for the man from Mulberry Street.

"Got a patient here, Larry?" they asked him jokingly.

"No," said Fitch, "not exactly a patient here; but it's possible you have a case here I'm a little bit interested in." He related the history of the curio dealer, with an urgent request that everything in connection with the old man be revealed to him. Britz, accustomed as he was to glean his facts tolerably, was unmistakably surprised by the readiness with which each of Fitch's friends promised aid, and hastened to put their promise into execution.

One of the younger doctors showed himself familiar with the old diamond maker's case, and seemed thoroughly to understand his delusion.

"He is now in my ward," he said. "He has been there six months; rather unusual case; harmless but hopeless. Can't rid himself of the idea that diamonds are bunked up all around him, and that all he has to do is to make one with his own hands to possess the whole of that wealth in jewels. He does his best to make it, too. Unfortunately the ingredients he demands include several dangerous chemicals, and of course he cannot be trusted to go pounding away with a pestle and mortar when his brain is so far gone that he is likely to forget the combination."

The other medical men looked interested.

"What do you do with him, doctor?" asked Fitch.

"Oh, I substitute harmless things—a little bismuth and sodium phosphate, and a dash of French chalk, and he thinks he has everything he needs. All the stuff he wants that is not dangerous enough mixing and mashing the paste and hammering away all day long. He rolls the mass into dirty little gray balls, and thinks they are diamonds."

"Let us have a look at him," said Fitch.

"Sure thing! You don't mind if I don't go with you? I have an amputation on in about ten minutes, and as there is a green nurse helping me, I don't want to take any chances in letting her monkey with the ether cone. So you won't mind, will you, if I ask you to run right along by yourself? Stay as long as you like."

Britz and Fitch were glad enough of an opportunity to question the old man without an auditor, and with a brief, "So long!" to his colleagues, the doctor piloted the detective through dreary stretches in that home of hopelessness to the ward where the curio dealer was found.

In a sunny corner of the long, bleak room, the barrenness of which was relieved slightly by a few boxes and pots of geraniums and fuchsias on the window sill, seated at a bench covered with old-leather, was the little old man the physician and the Headquarters sleuth sought.
